To Mr. E. K. McNew we dedicate
this yearbook in affection and gratitude.
Through years of tireless effort and unerring vision he has built a school of which we are justly proud. To each of us he has been a wise counselor, an inspiring teacher, and a good friend.

In grateful appreciation to Mrs. Paul Newman, we the seniors of Old Town School, class of 1948, wish to dedicate this page. We are sincerely thankful for everything she has done for us.
Under her splendid guidance and patience teaching us, we should attain the highest goal possible, and give her the due credit she deserves.
She has filled our life with happiness and shared our sorrows during this year.

I sought to fashion a garland of flowers,
But the roses were faded and dead.
I tried to fashion a garland of verse,
But my skill at rhyming had fled.

I wanted a poem in moonlight dressed,
With dewy cobwebs in her hair.
Her lace I should weave of the song of the lark,
And all of Spring's perfumes she'd wear.

But the roses were dead, so the garland
I wove
Was of daisies the green meadows had;
And my dreams on tired wings sank earthward
to rest,
And my verses in homespun were clad.

CLASS HISTORY

On an autumn day in 1936, the class of '48 timidly entered the doors of education at various schools.

Here at Old Town, Carolyn, Ruth, Joan, Beulah, and Martha, along with a number of other students, learned their ABC's with Mrs. Trivette as their teacher. How well I remember, even across all the years, how thrilled we were about a class picnic held on the last day of that year.

Our second year was spent with Miss Kapp as teacher. How hard it was for us to learn addition and subtraction, how many tears we shed, and how loud were our lamentations! But with the passing of time we finally mastered even arithmetic, and advanced to the next grade with flying colors.

In the third grade Mrs. Yarbrough increased our knowledge of readin', writin', and 'rithmetic so much that the members of the scholastic team won the honor of being the smartest in the county. This winning team was composed of J. W. James, Jr., Lucy Leake, and Martha Hunter. During the year, the girls made doll dresses which we entered in a contest. I don't believe our efforts were appreciated though, for if we won any prizes I can't remember them.

While in the fourth and fifth grades, we acquired some new classmates. Among them were Helen Phillips, Mamie Wooters, and Wiley Jones.

During our sixth year, we occupied a room in the basement of the high school. Mrs. Furches, our teacher, made curtains and matching chair backs, which added considerably to the appearance of the room. Arlis Vernon joined our class that year. I did not suspect then that during his junior and senior years he would become the toast of the school--leading the Panthers to countless victories, and covering school and self with glory.

In the seventh year we must have been more troublesome than in previous grades, for I remember that the entire class made such low conduct grades one quarter that our teacher was ashamed of them and would not record them on our report cards.

However, we recovered from this in time to be the little eighth grade angels. Barbara Belton and Mary Davis Jones were new members of the class. At first, changing classes was a great delight to us, but in the course of a year it became just routine.

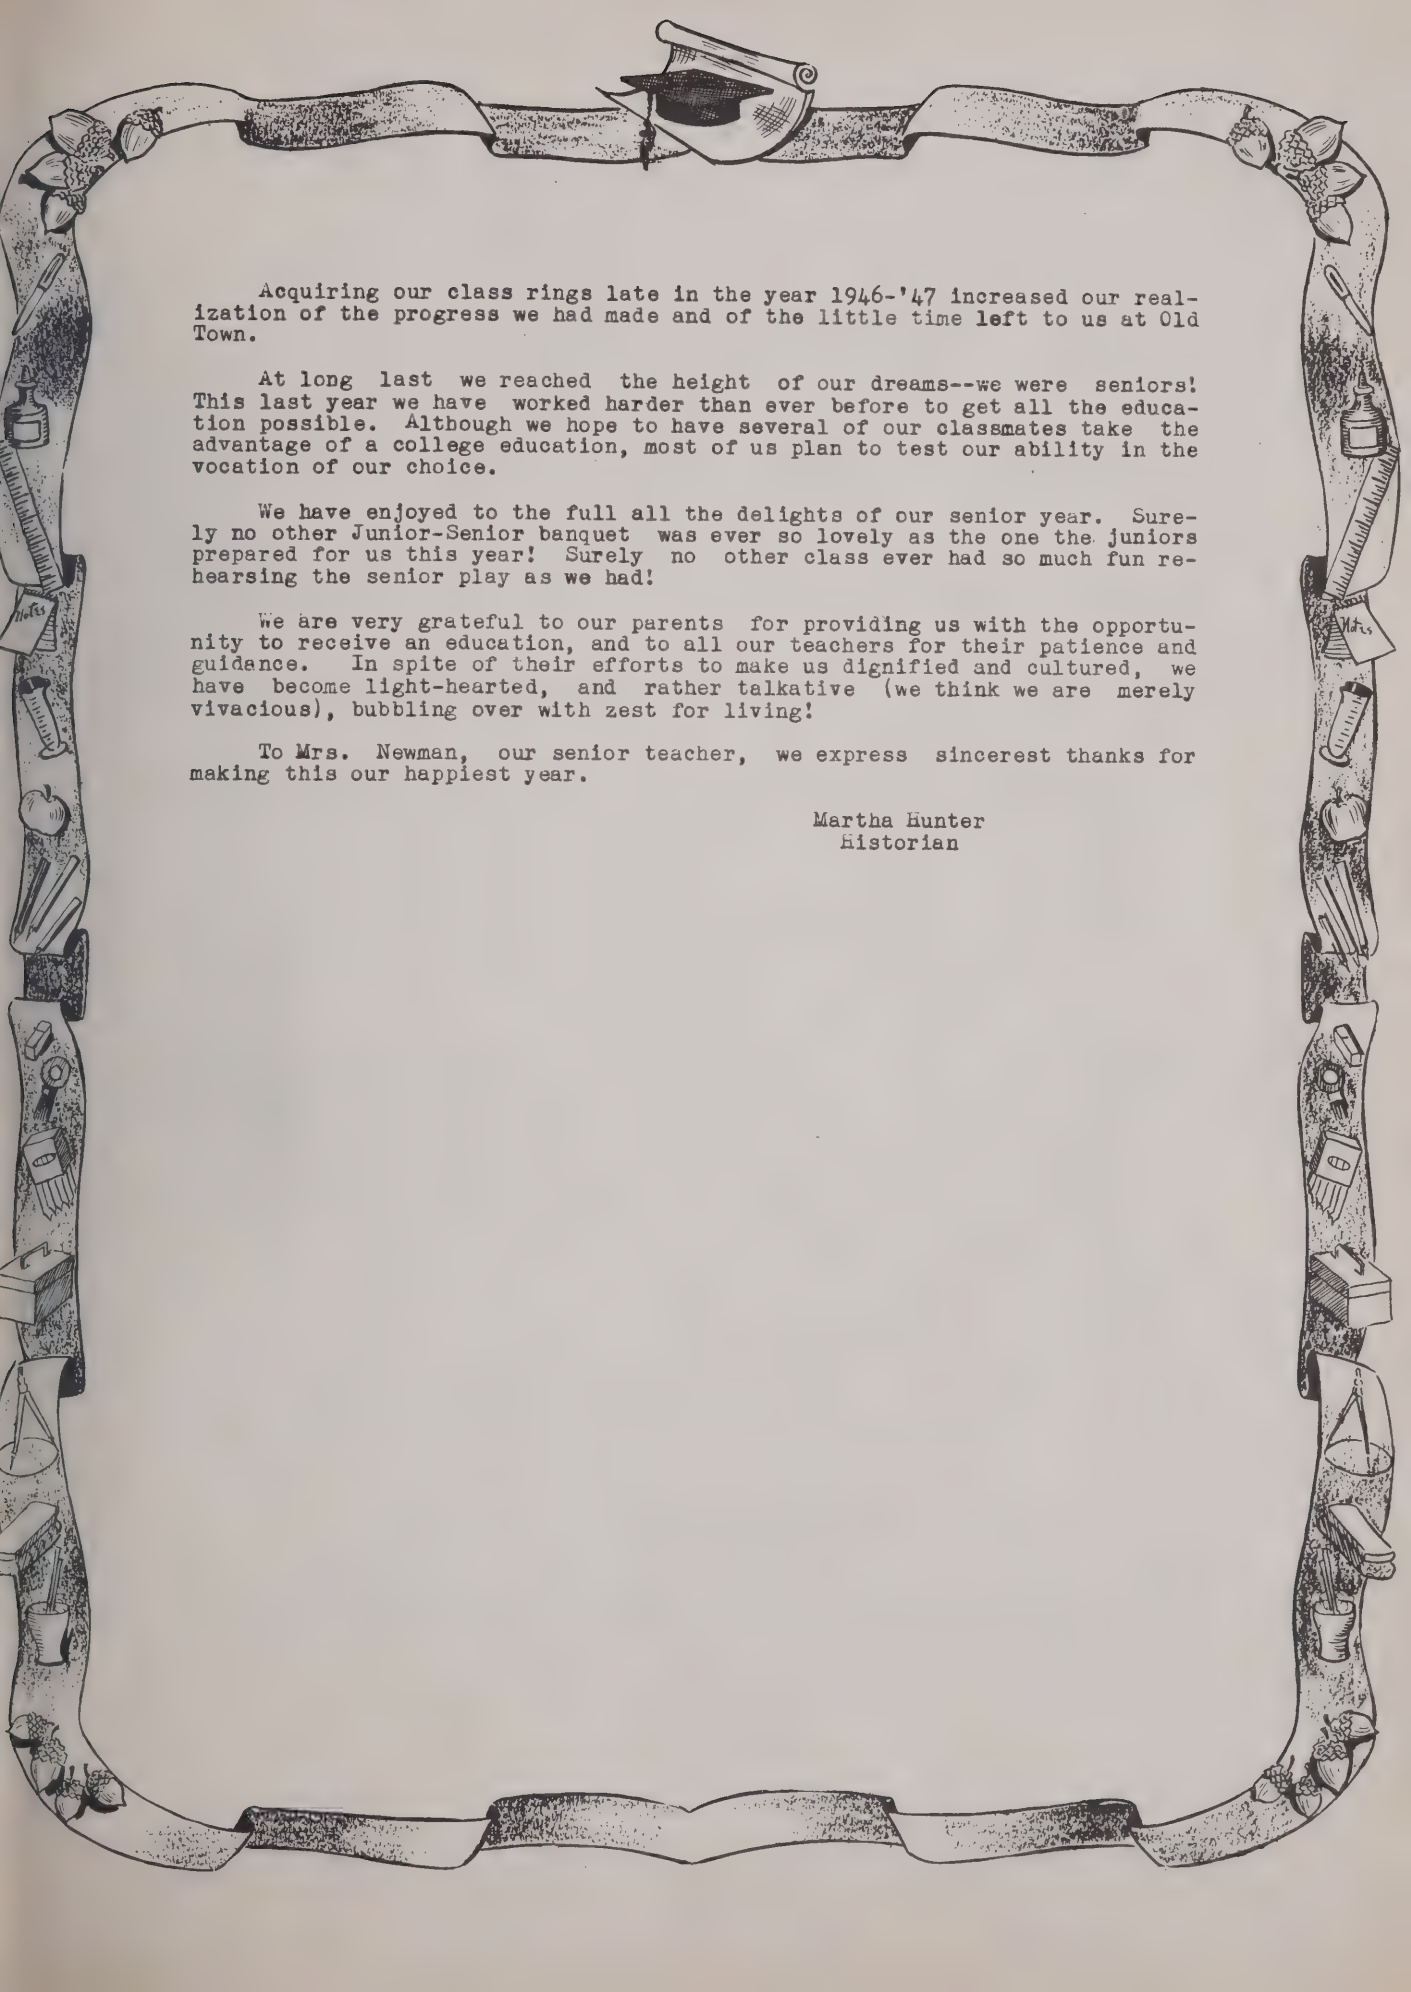

We were two large classes, when brimming with joy and self-assurance, we began our freshman year. Frank Hauser, Jo Pfaff, Syvileen Blankenship, Opal Wilson, Pauline Wishon, Janet Athan, and Julia Conrad were among the Vienna students whom we welcomed. Most of us studied hard, especially in algebra, but nothing outstanding was done in other activities, or that one either as I recall it.

By the time we reached the tenth grade, Mary Swaim and Dolores Colbert had brought a bit of excitement and novelty by entering our class.

We could hardly wait to be juniors, but when the time arrived our original fifty-two had shrunk to an enrollment of twenty. The entire class, with the exception of Wiley, took the commercial course.

The Junior-Senior banquet, held May 10, 1947, at the Cavalier Grill, was the greatest thrill of our lives up to that time. The colored crepe paper, the gorgeous arrays of flowers, and the multi-colored gowns of the girls transformed the grill into a scene of rare beauty. The program brought roars of laughter from everyone, and the entire banquet proved a success.

Acquiring our class rings late in the year 1946-'47 increased our realization of the progress we had made and of the little time left to us at Old Town.

At long last we reached the height of our dreams--we were seniors! This last year we have worked harder than ever before to get all the education possible. Although we hope to have several of our classmates take the advantage of a college education, most of us plan to test our ability in the vocation of our choice.

We have enjoyed to the full all the delights of our senior year. Surely no other Junior-Senior banquet was ever so lovely as the one the juniors prepared for us this year! Surely no other class ever had so much fun rehearsing the senior play as we had!

We are very grateful to our parents for providing us with the opportunity to receive an education, and to all our teachers for their patience and guidance. In spite of their efforts to make us dignified and cultured, we have become light-hearted, and rather talkative (we think we are merely vivacious), bubbling over with zest for living!

To Mrs. Newman, our senior teacher, we express sincerest thanks for making this our happiest year.

Martha Hunter
Historian

LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT

We, the 1948 seniors of Old Town High School, being of sound mind and healthy bodies, do hereby dispense our many cherished possessions.

ARTICLE I

Section 1. To Mr. E. K. McNew, our principal, and all other members of the faculty, we leave our warmest thanks and heart-felt gratitude for their patience and effort to teach us and for the many privileges they have given us.

Section 2. To Mrs. Newman, our homeroom teacher, who has so faithfully helped us in everything we have endeavored to do, and who has patiently taught us, we leave our gratitude!!

Section 3. To the juniors, we leave the title of "seniors" (please be as good an example as we have been.) Then, too, there's the front row seats in chapel and the place back of the lunchline which we are happy to leave you.

We also pass the key of knowledge to you in the hope that your class will be as intelligent as ours has been.

Section 4. To the underclassmen, we leave all of our old book reports, in case they are ever needed, a newly painted building, our A's on conduct, and our commercial knowledge.

ARTICLE II

Section 1. Wiley Jones wills his skill in French to Betty Jean Cartwright. Think it will help, Betty?

Section 2. To Betty Mae Lawson (the Old Town flirt), the senior girls will their boyfriends. Maybe there'll be enough.

Section 3. Julia Conrad wills her height and ability to play basketball to "Shorty" Fulp. (The height is all "Shorty" needs.)

Section 4. Beulah Barber wills her luck in love to anyone who may happen to need it.

Section 5. Mamie Wooters leaves all her love letters from Arlis Vernon to Jackie Clodfelter.

Section 6. Joan Adams wills her naturally red hair to Herman Shamel, Bobby Young, and Hubert Myers. No more peroxide, boys!!

Section 7. Opal Wilson wills her position as chief cheerleader to Imogene Jennings.

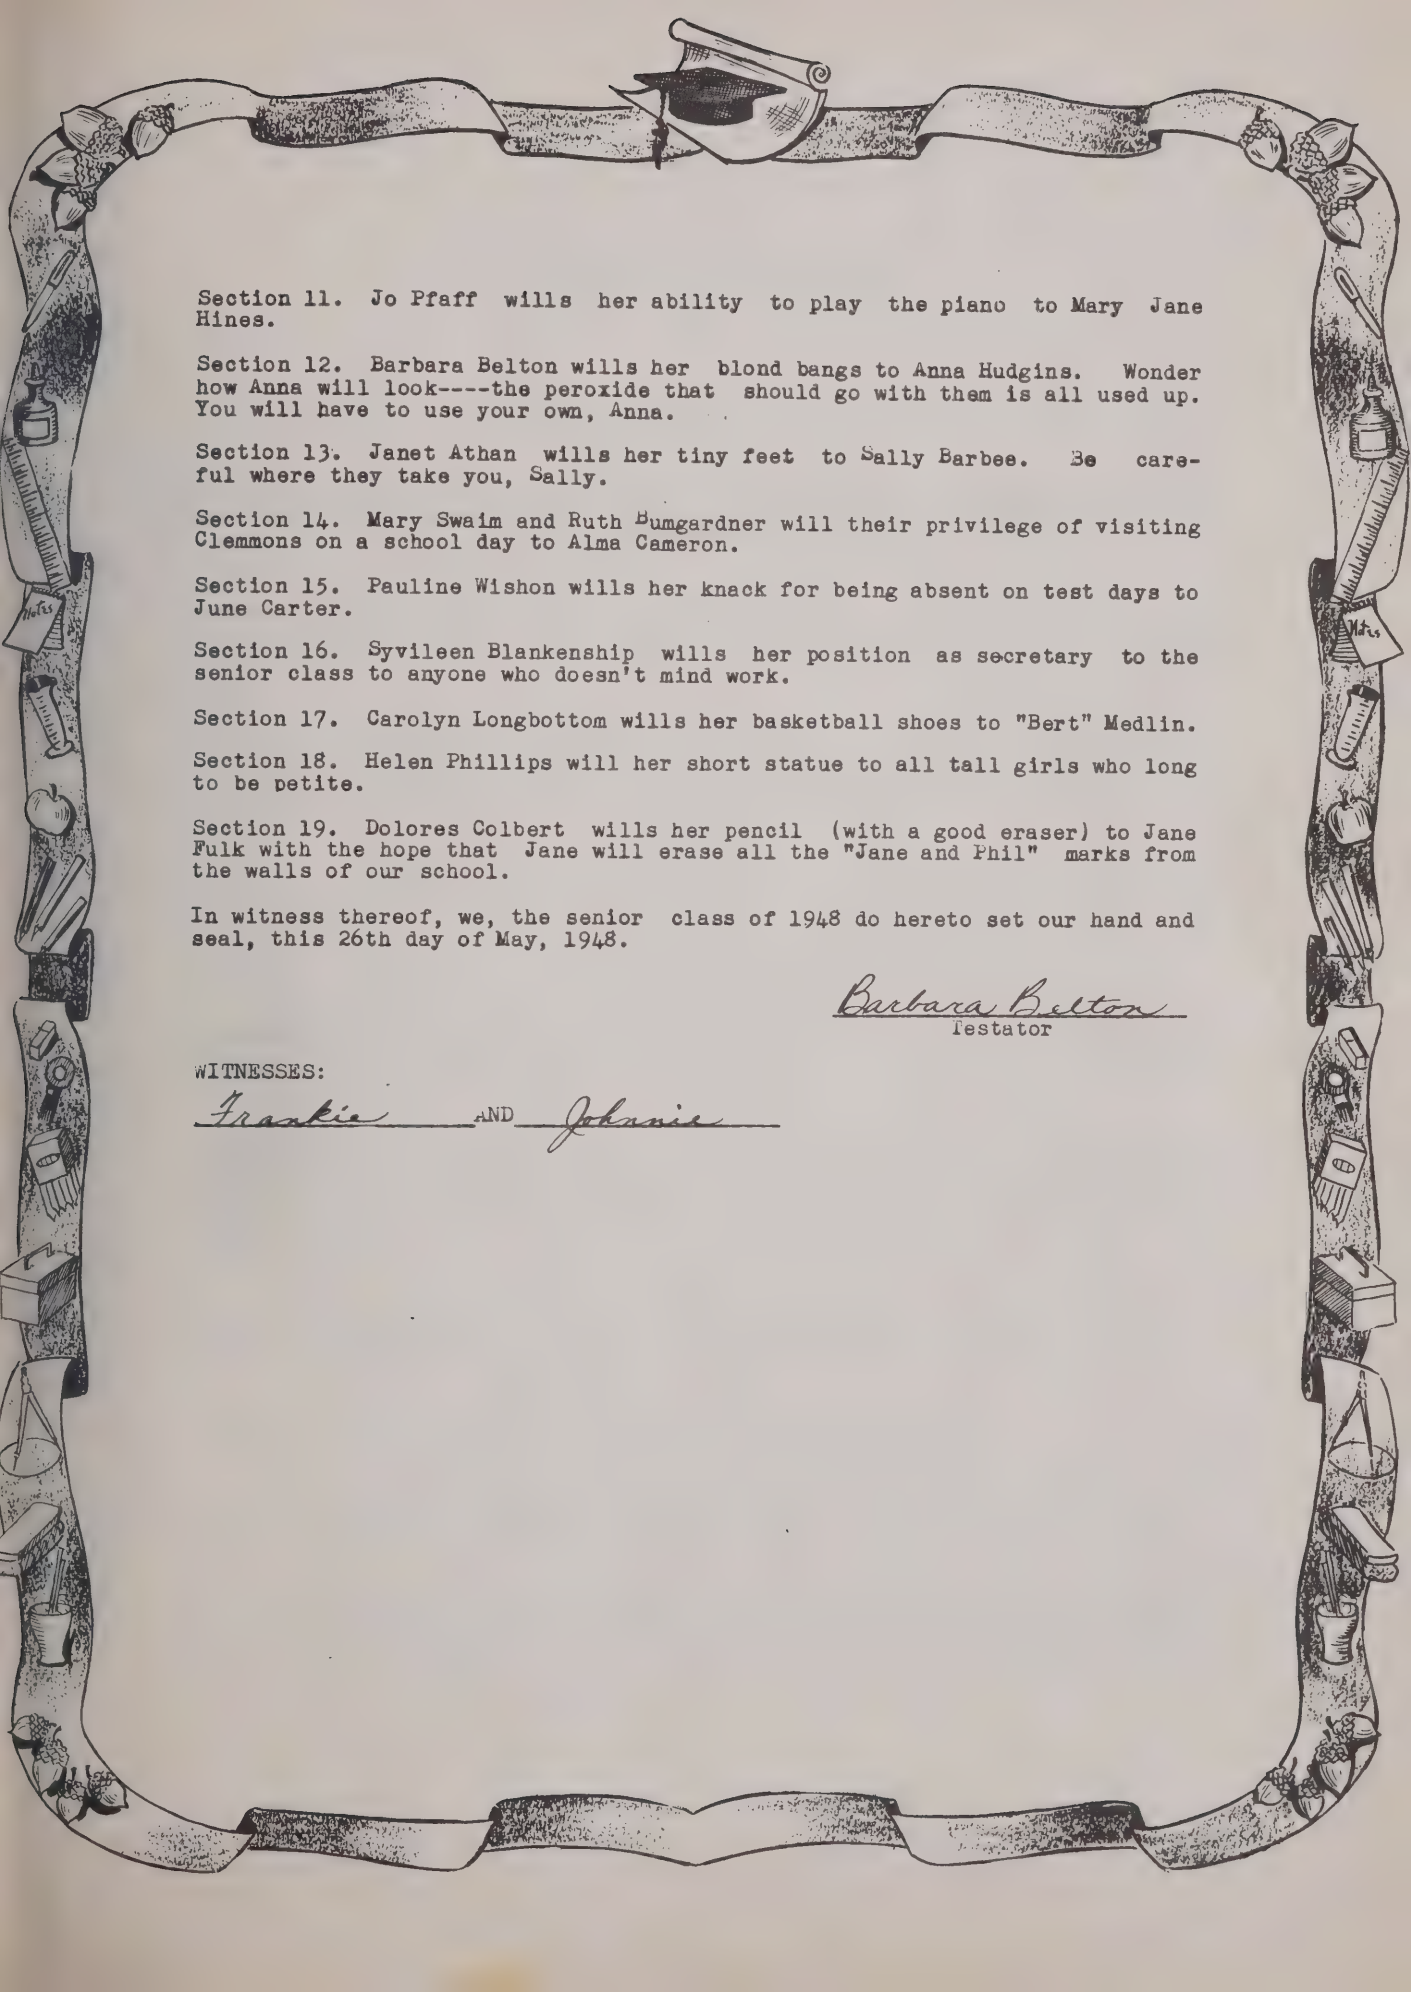

Section 8. Frank Hauser leaves his A's on conduct to "Dean" Bowen.

Section 9. Arlis Vernon wills his manly beauty and his way with the girls to Johnny Hendrix.

Section 10. Martha Hunter and Mary Davis Jones will their love for each other to the Old Town "gruesome-twosome," Gray Pfaff and Bobby Swaim.

Section 11. Jo Pfaff wills her ability to play the piano to Mary Jane Hines.

Section 12. Barbara Belton wills her blond bangs to Anna Hudgins. Wonder how Anna will look----the peroxide that should go with them is all used up. You will have to use your own, Anna.

Section 13. Janet Athan wills her tiny feet to Sally Barbee. Be careful where they take you, Sally.

Section 14. Mary Swaim and Ruth Bumgardner will their privilege of visiting Clemmons on a school day to Alma Cameron.

Section 15. Pauline Wishon wills her knack for being absent on test days to June Carter.

Section 16. Syvileen Blankenship wills her position as secretary to the senior class to anyone who doesn't mind work.

Section 17. Carolyn Longbottom wills her basketball shoes to "Bert" Medlin.

Section 18. Helen Phillips will her short statue to all tall girls who long to be petite.

Section 19. Dolores Colbert wills her pencil (with a good eraser) to Jane Fulk with the hope that Jane will erase all the "Jane and Phil" marks from the walls of our school.

In witness thereof, we, the senior class of 1948 do hereto set our hand and seal, this 26th day of May, 1948.

CLASS PROPHECY

The warm spring sunlight poured through the open windows of the classroom.

"The sum of the interior angles of a polygon of  $n$  sides is  $(n-2)$  straight angles." Mr. Wood's voice became more and more monotonous, but I tried to arouse myself and absorb some of the geometry truths which he so tirelessly attempted to instill into our listless brains.

"If three or more parallels intercept----", he continued. His voice rose in competition with a newly awakened insect which persistently buzzed around my cerebellum. "Buzz-z-z-z," went the insect, and as the slumber conducive voice of Mr. Wood mingled with the drowsy buzzing sound, I again dozed.

The classroom seemed to change. There were no uncomfortable seats with desks piled high with books in untidy array. Instead, there were comfortable plush and plastic chairs arranged behind plastic tables facing a screen. Through an opening at the back of the room could be seen part of a projector and the sound apparatus of a futuristic movie machine.

Arlis Vernon, president of the class of 1948, at Old Town, rose and explained, "Since our class has been so widely scattered, the few of us who have remained near the Tri-city (Old Town-Winston-Salem) have decided it would be unwise to attempt a homecoming. Instead, we have contacted all members and asked them to send us a record on film of their everyday life and work. This film in turn will be sent to each class member."

Arlis pushed a button conveniently placed on the table in front of him and handsome shades silently slid over the plastic windows, shutting out the light and leaving the room in a restful semi-darkness. He pushed another button. The screen lit up and the movie was on.

There before our eyes, heralded by beautiful music, were three lovely ladies clad in stunning plastic evening gowns, designed by the famous designer Joan Adams. The three were Jo Pfaff at the piano, with Opal Wilson and Julia Conrad furnishing the tonsorial calisthenics. They were singing to us, their classmates, "Should Auld Acquaintance Be Forgot." Their successful team is known from coast to coast. "The Treacherous Trio," they call themselves.

The music faded and we found ourselves gazing at the sandy beach at Ocean View, Virginia. "Hello, everybody," exclaimed a merry voice from a lady on the sand, "I hope all of you are as happy as I am. Meet the gang. This is friend husband and Junior."

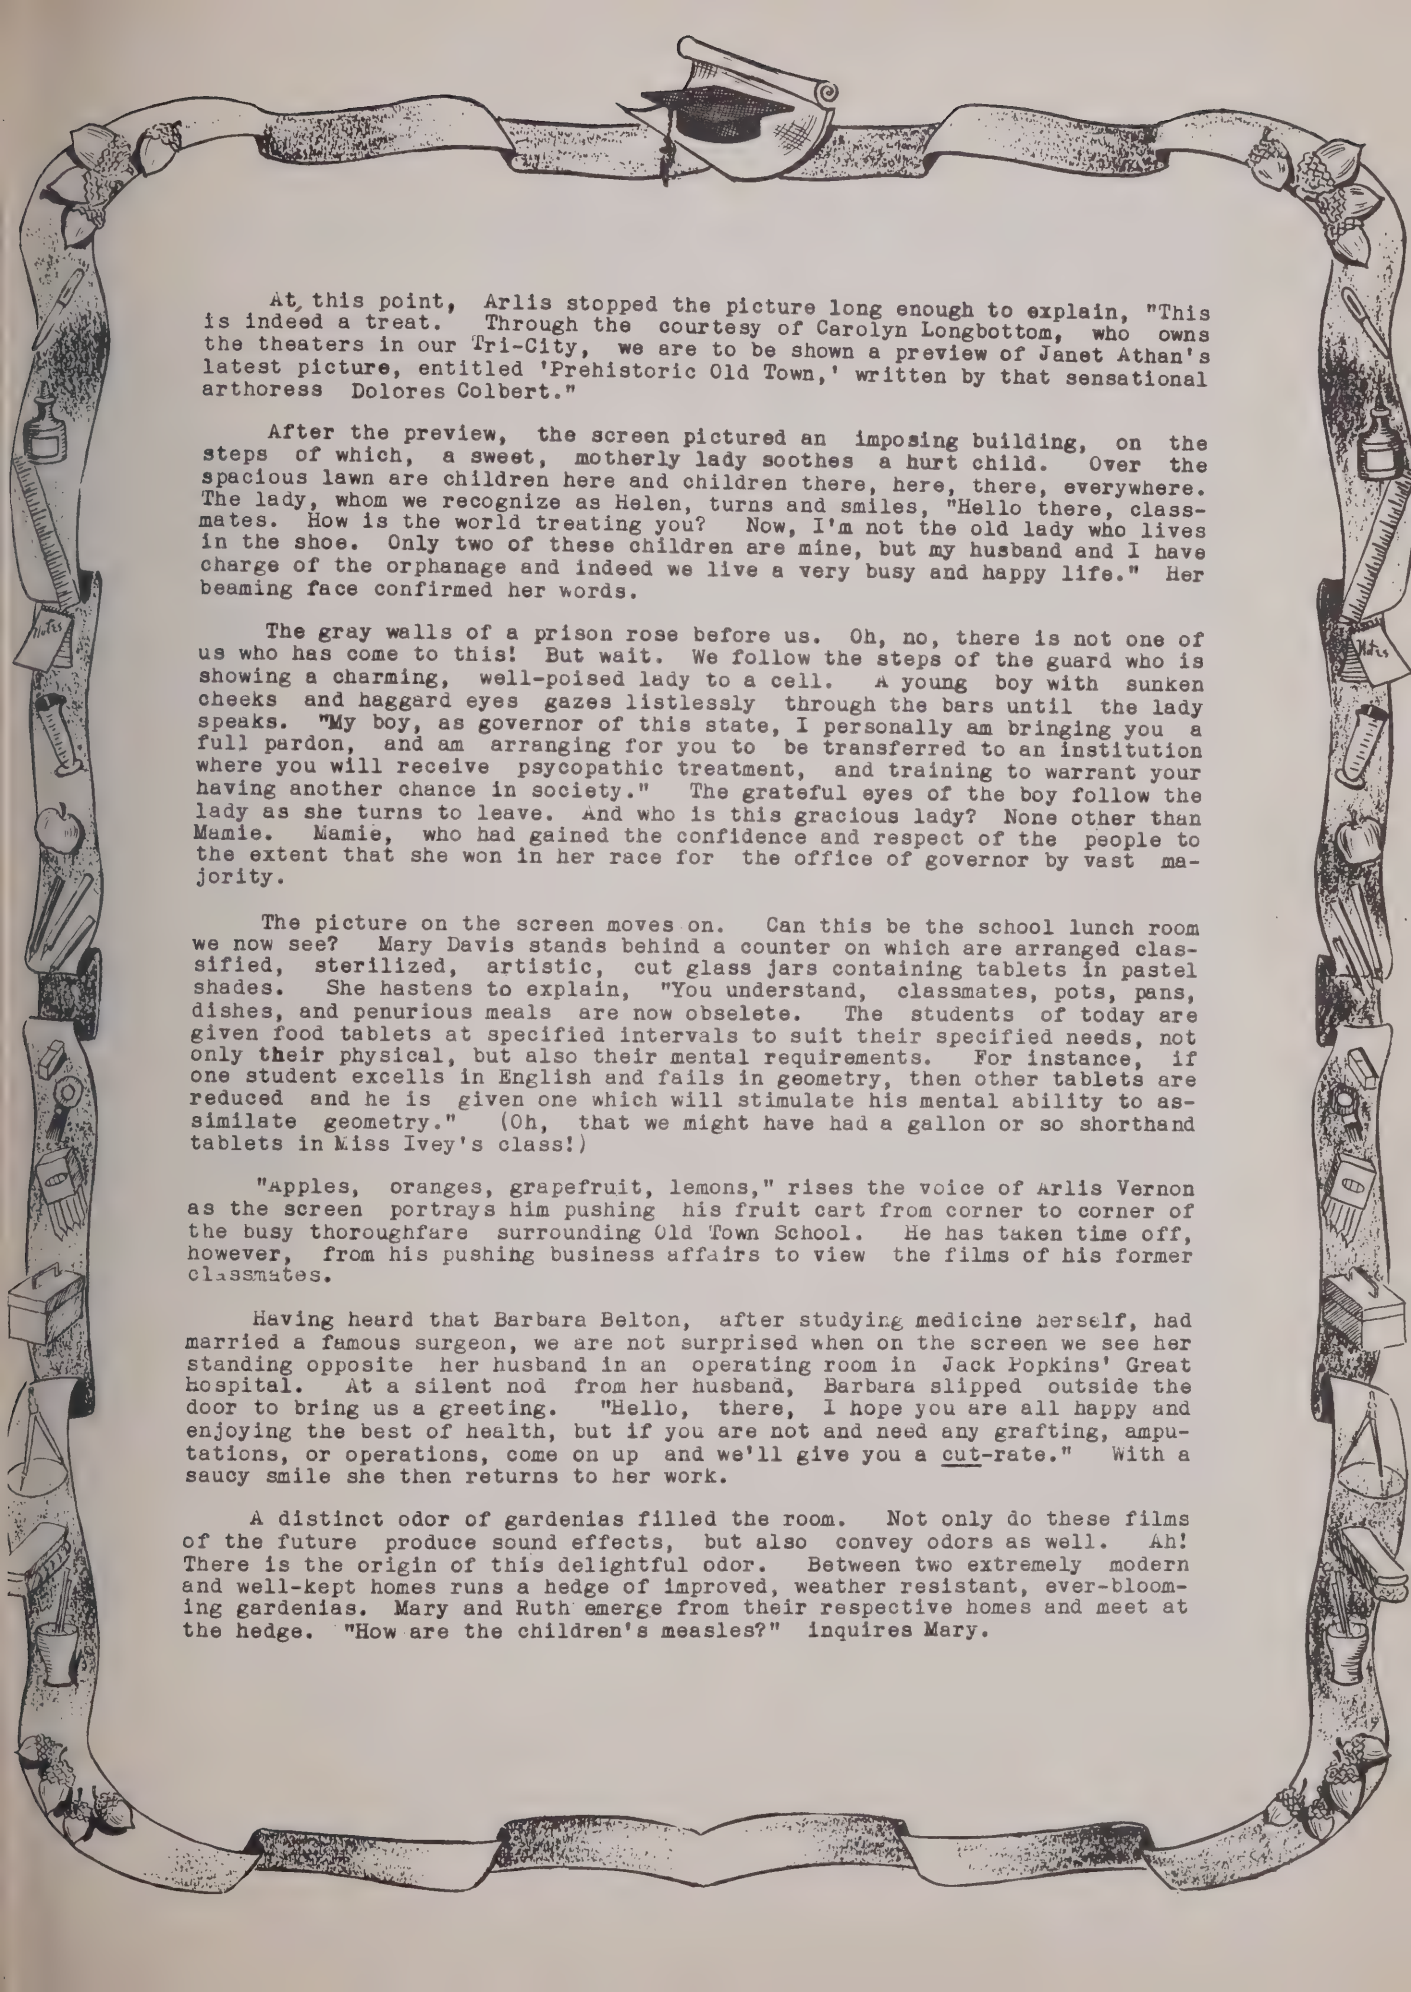

We recognized Beulah Barber with her contented family. Amid their laughter, and the splashing of the waves, the scene changed.

The scene moved to the stately room where Congress is in session. We see our illustrious Syvileen leaving the assembly hall where she has just put up a victorious battle for higher education and more adequate food programs for the children of our world.

We shiver as the scene carries us to the frozen north. But Alaska fails to intimidate Martha and her missionary husband. We see them gliding through the snow on snow shoes, and Martha pauses long enough to pitch a snow ball in the direction of the camera. Her warm greeting, "Hello, everybody," belies the cold.

At this point, Arlis stopped the picture long enough to explain, "This is indeed a treat. Through the courtesy of Carolyn Longbottom, who owns the theaters in our Tri-City, we are to be shown a preview of Janet Athan's latest picture, entitled 'Prehistoric Old Town,' written by that sensational authoress Dolores Colbert."

After the preview, the screen pictured an imposing building, on the steps of which, a sweet, motherly lady soothes a hurt child. Over the spacious lawn are children here and children there, here, there, everywhere. The lady, whom we recognize as Helen, turns and smiles, "Hello there, classmates. How is the world treating you? Now, I'm not the old lady who lives in the shoe. Only two of these children are mine, but my husband and I have charge of the orphanage and indeed we live a very busy and happy life." Her beaming face confirmed her words.

The gray walls of a prison rose before us. Oh, no, there is not one of us who has come to this! But wait. We follow the steps of the guard who is showing a charming, well-poised lady to a cell. A young boy with sunken cheeks and haggard eyes gazes listlessly through the bars until the lady speaks. "My boy, as governor of this state, I personally am bringing you a full pardon, and am arranging for you to be transferred to an institution where you will receive psychopathic treatment, and training to warrant your having another chance in society." The grateful eyes of the boy follow the lady as she turns to leave. And who is this gracious lady? None other than Mamie. Mamie, who had gained the confidence and respect of the people to the extent that she won in her race for the office of governor by vast majority.

The picture on the screen moves on. Can this be the school lunch room we now see? Mary Davis stands behind a counter on which are arranged classified, sterilized, artistic, cut glass jars containing tablets in pastel shades. She hastens to explain, "You understand, classmates, pots, pans, dishes, and penurious meals are now obsolete. The students of today are given food tablets at specified intervals to suit their specified needs, not only their physical, but also their mental requirements. For instance, if one student excels in English and fails in geometry, then other tablets are reduced and he is given one which will stimulate his mental ability to assimilate geometry." (Oh, that we might have had a gallon or so shorthand tablets in Miss Ivey's class!)

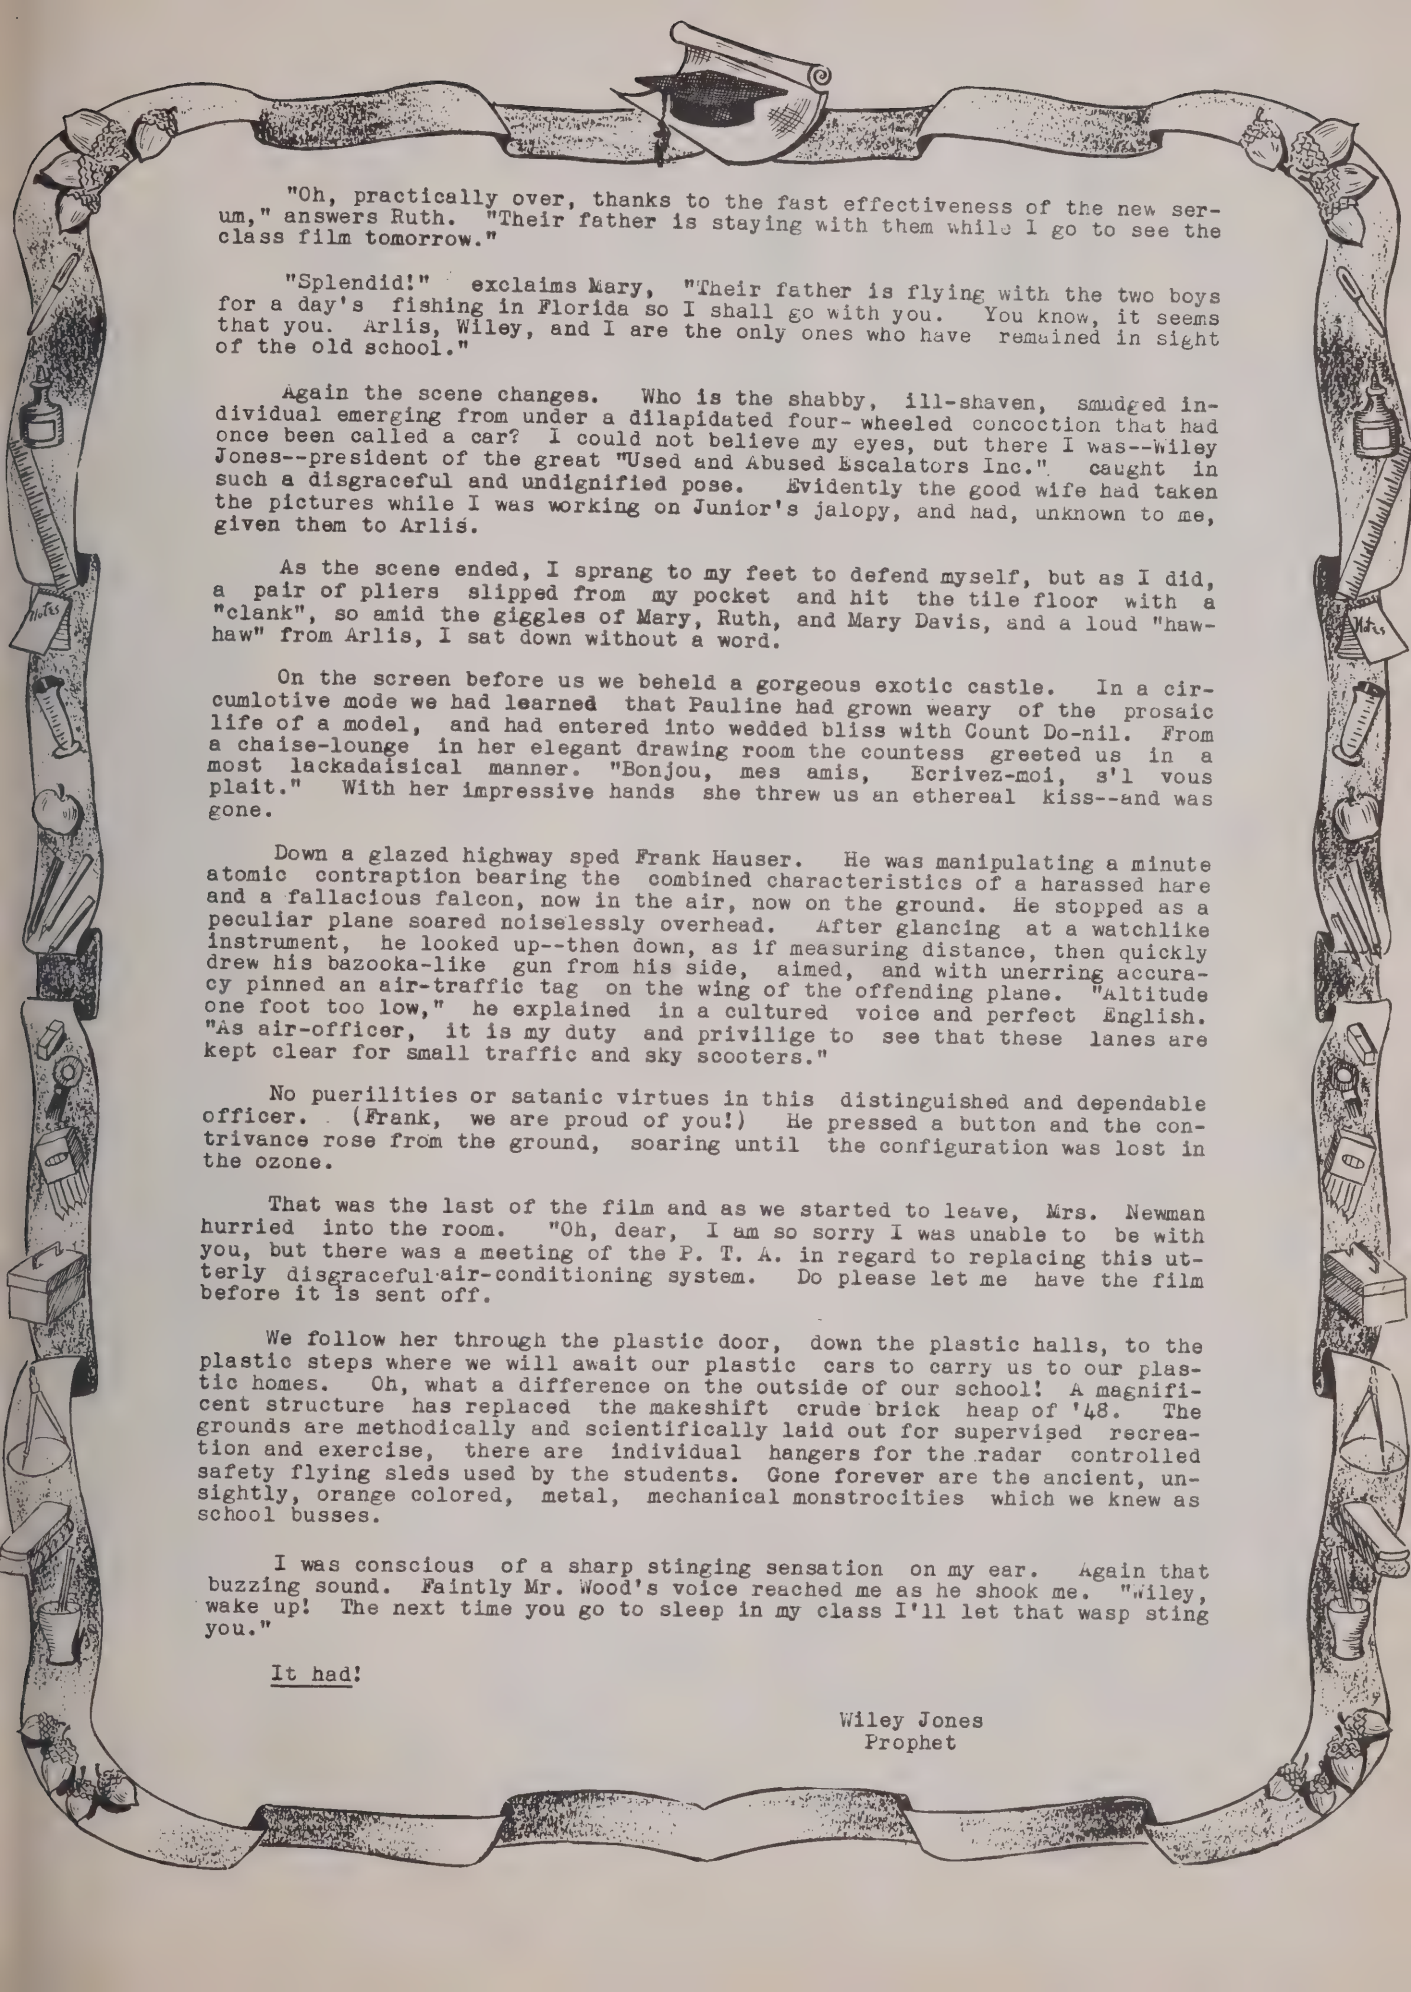

"Apples, oranges, grapefruit, lemons," rises the voice of Arlis Vernon as the screen portrays him pushing his fruit cart from corner to corner of the busy thoroughfare surrounding Old Town School. He has taken time off, however, from his pushing business affairs to view the films of his former classmates.

Having heard that Barbara Belton, after studying medicine herself, had married a famous surgeon, we are not surprised when on the screen we see her standing opposite her husband in an operating room in Jack Popkins' Great hospital. At a silent nod from her husband, Barbara slipped outside the door to bring us a greeting. "Hello, there, I hope you are all happy and enjoying the best of health, but if you are not and need any grafting, amputations, or operations, come on up and we'll give you a cut-rate." With a saucy smile she then returns to her work.

A distinct odor of gardenias filled the room. Not only do these films of the future produce sound effects, but also convey odors as well. Ah! There is the origin of this delightful odor. Between two extremely modern and well-kept homes runs a hedge of improved, weather resistant, ever-blooming gardenias. Mary and Ruth emerge from their respective homes and meet at the hedge. "How are the children's measles?" inquires Mary.

"Oh, practically over, thanks to the fast effectiveness of the new serum," answers Ruth. "Their father is staying with them while I go to see the class film tomorrow."

"Splendid!" exclaims Mary, "Their father is flying with the two boys for a day's fishing in Florida so I shall go with you. You know, it seems that you, Arlis, Wiley, and I are the only ones who have remained in sight of the old school."

Again the scene changes. Who is the shabby, ill-shaven, smudged individual emerging from under a dilapidated four-wheeled concoction that had once been called a car? I could not believe my eyes, but there I was--Wiley Jones--president of the great "Used and Abused Escalators Inc." caught in such a disgraceful and undignified pose. Evidently the good wife had taken the pictures while I was working on Junior's jalopy, and had, unknown to me, given them to Arlis.

As the scene ended, I sprang to my feet to defend myself, but as I did, a pair of pliers slipped from my pocket and hit the tile floor with a "clank", so amid the giggles of Mary, Ruth, and Mary Davis, and a loud "haw-haw" from Arlis, I sat down without a word.

On the screen before us we beheld a gorgeous exotic castle. In a circumlocutive mode we had learned that Pauline had grown weary of the prosaic life of a model, and had entered into wedded bliss with Count Do-nil. From a chaise-lounge in her elegant drawing room the countess greeted us in a most lackadaisical manner. "Bonjou, mes amis, Ecrivez-moi, s'l vous plait." With her impressive hands she threw us an ethereal kiss--and was gone.

Down a glazed highway sped Frank Hauser. He was manipulating a minute atomic contraption bearing the combined characteristics of a harassed hare and a fallacious falcon, now in the air, now on the ground. He stopped as a peculiar plane soared noiselessly overhead. After glancing at a watchlike instrument, he looked up--then down, as if measuring distance, then quickly drew his bazooka-like gun from his side, aimed, and with unerring accuracy pinned an air-traffic tag on the wing of the offending plane. "Altitude one foot too low," he explained in a cultured voice and perfect English. "As air-officer, it is my duty and privilege to see that these lanes are kept clear for small traffic and sky scooters."

No puerilities or satanic virtues in this distinguished and dependable officer. (Frank, we are proud of you!) He pressed a button and the contrivance rose from the ground, soaring until the configuration was lost in the ozone.

That was the last of the film and as we started to leave, Mrs. Newman hurried into the room. "Oh, dear, I am so sorry I was unable to be with you, but there was a meeting of the P. T. A. in regard to replacing this utterly disgraceful-air-conditioning system. Do please let me have the film before it is sent off.

We follow her through the plastic door, down the plastic halls, to the plastic steps where we will await our plastic cars to carry us to our plastic homes. Oh, what a difference on the outside of our school! A magnificent structure has replaced the makeshift crude brick heap of '48. The grounds are methodically and scientifically laid out for supervised recreation and exercise, there are individual hangers for the radar controlled safety flying sleds used by the students. Gone forever are the ancient, unsightly, orange colored, metal, mechanical monstrocities which we knew as school busses.

I was conscious of a sharp stinging sensation on my ear. Again that buzzing sound. Faintly Mr. Wood's voice reached me as he shook me. "Wiley, wake up! The next time you go to sleep in my class I'll let that wasp sting you."

It had!

Dearest Darling,
I love you so much I
forget I was writing you.
I will continue this is really to you. I love you for what you are and not for what you could be. Don't ever leave my side when I need you when I am worried about my love affairs. I do wish we didn't live so far apart! (sob) Just think a whole long mile. (sob) Oh! my darling if I have ever done anything or will ever do anything to make you not love me, (slap me down!) (don't hit my new, please) seriously, Peggy live you are one of my dearest friends.
Think of all the fun we have had together, especially the last two years. Thanks for the millions of things you have done for me. I am looking forward to the "slumber party" Friday night. Always remember me. When you get married and live out there (think that where you went to live) remember out good times in high school and in the summers. Thanks, again, for being my good friend and being as sweet as you are.

Love you muchly,

Dear Peggy,
 The pleasure has been all mine to have been in your class this short year.
 Don't forget about such unforgettable times such as the recital and the "Big
